I live in an anti-BSL state, California. California lost the title of number one in pit bull deaths to Texas last year. I also live in the Inland Empire of California, and we are number one in the entire country for deaths by pit bulls. We have been done a great injustice by our State for not allowing us to pass local ordinances to protect our citizens.

I originally came from Georgia where one side of my family was well known for dog fighting. I hear them laugh at the propaganda being spread these days about pits. Never were pits meant to be pets, their designers state this time and time again. Normal canine behavior has been bred from them. Pits are liars. They aren't vicious 24/7, they act like normal dogs. We all know triggers for normal dogs to attack, pits have no triggers. Out of the blue comes an attack.

Then the attacks against the victims of pit bull attacks come from those who defend the breed. Vicious, hateful statements and actions are taken against these victims. Mothers who sat beside a closed casket are told it is all their fault. A father whose son was literally ripped apart by beloved pits was told to use his son's head for a ball since the son doesn't need it anymore.

The point is that those who own pit bulls are not the cream of the crop. Those who want such a canine are not our outstanding citizens in the community. If the pit defenders come after you, then put the vote to the people like they did in Miami and Aurora, CO. Take the message sent in those elections, almost 3 to 1 voted to retain their pit bull ban.

Thank you for consideration of these thoughts. Pat Dunaway, Rialto, CA
