STORIES

I am shaken, and sore, and stiff, and bruised. As I have told you many times already, I haven't the least idea how it happened and there is no use in plaguing me with any more questions about it. Of course, if you wish it, I can read you an extract from my diary, giving a full account of the events of yesterday, but if you expect to find any clue to the mystery in that, I fear you are doomed to be disappointed.

August 23, Tuesday. They say that we Photographers are a blind race at best: that we learn to see at even the prettiest faces as so much light and shade; that we seldom admire, and never love. This is a delusion I long to break through—if I could only find a young lady to photograph, realizing my ideal of beauty: a ve all, if her name should be (why is it, wonder, that I date on the name Amelia: more than any other word in the English language,) feel sure that I could shake off this cold, philosophic lethargy.

The time has come at last. Only this evening I fell in with young Harry Glover in the Haymarket. "Tubbs!" he shouted, slapping me familiarly on the back, "my Uncle wants you downstairs at his Villa, camera and all!"

"But I don't know your uncle," I replied, with my characteristic caution. (N.B. If I have a virtue, it is quiet, gentlemanly caution.)

"Never, mind, old boy, he knows all about you. You be off by the early train, and take your whole kit of bottles, for you'll find lots of faces to uglify, and—"

"Can't go," I said rather gruffly, for the extent of the job alarmed me, and I wished to cut him short, having a decided objection to talking slang in the public streets. "Well, they'll be precious cut up about it, that's all," said Harry, with rather a blank face, and "my cousin Amelia—"

"Don't say another word!" I cried enthusiastically, "I'll go!" And as my omnibus came by at the moment, I jumped in and rattled off before he had recovered his astonishment at my change of manner. So it is settled, and to-morrow I am to see an Amelia, and—oh Destiny, what hast thou in store for me?

August 24, Wednesday.—A glorious morning: Packed in a great hurry, luckily breaking only two bottles and three glasses in doing so. Arrived at Rosemary Villa where the party were sitting down to breakfast. Father, mother, two sons from school, a host of children from the nursery and the inevitable BABY.

But how shall I describe the daughter? Words are powerless; nothing but a Tablootype could do it. Her nose was in beautiful perspective—her mouth wanting perhaps the least possible foreshortening—but the exquisite half-tints on the cheek would have blinded one to any defects, and as to the high light on her chin, it was (photographically speaking) perfection. Oh! what a picture she would have made if fate had not—but I am anticipating.

There was a Captain Flanagan present—

I am aware that the preceding paragraph is slightly abrupt, but when I reached that point, I remembered that the idiot actually believed himself engaged to Amelia (my Amelia!). I choked, and could get no further. His figure, I am willing to admit, was good: some might have admired his face; but what is face or figure without brains?
covered the lens. The little wretch instantly threw its head back, luckily only an inch, as it was stopped by the nurse’s nose, establishing the infant’s claim to first blood (to use a sporting phrase). This, of course, gave me one eye to the result, something that might be called a nose, and an unnaturally wide mouth. Called it a full face accordingly and went on to

PICTURE 4.—The three younger girls, as they would have appeared, if by any possibility a black dog could have been administered to each of them at the same moment, and the three tied together by the hair before the expression produced by the medicine had subsided from any of their faces. Of course, I kept this view of the subject to myself, and merely said that “it reminded me of a picture of the three Graces,” but the sentence ended in an involuntary groan, which I had the greatest difficulty in converting into a cough.

PICTURE 5.—This was to have been the great artistic triumph of the day; a family group, designed by the two parents, and combining the domestic with the allegorical. It was intended to represent the baby being crowned with flowers, by the united efforts of the children, regulated by the advice of the father, under the personal superintendence of the mother; and to combine with this the secondary meaning of Victory transferring her laurels to Innocence, with Resolution, Independence, Faith, Hope and Charity, assisting in the graceful task, while Wisdom looks benignly on, and smiles approvingly. Such, I say, was the intention; the result, to any unprejudiced observer, was capable of but one interpretation—that the baby was in a fit—that the mother (doubtless under some erroneous notions of the principles of Human Anatomy), was endeavoring to recover it by bringing the crown of its head in contact with its chest—that the}

However, I seized an opportunity toward the close of the meal to give utterance to my overwrought feelings, turning toward Amelia, who was sitting next to me, I had just murmured the words, “there beats in this bosom a heart,” when a general silence warned me to leave the sentence unfinished. With the most admirable presence of mind she said, “some tart, did you say, Mr. Tubbs? Captain Flanagan, may I trouble you to cut Mr. Tubbs some of that tart?”

“No, sir!” I interrupted, with a look that ought to have crushed him, but he only grinned and said, “don’t be modest now, Tubbs, me bhoi, sure there’s plenty more in the larder.”

Amelia was looking anxiously at me; so I swallowed my rage and the tart.

Luncheon over, after receiving directions by which to find the cottage, I attached to my camera the hood used for developing pictures in the open air, placed it over my shoulder, and set out for the hill which had been pointed out to me.

My Amelia was sitting in the window working, as I passed with the machine; the Irish idiot was with her. In reply to my look of undying affection, she said anxiously: “I’m sure that’s too heavy for you, Mr. Tubbs. Won’t you have a boy to carry it?”

“Or a donkey?” I giggled the captain.

I pulled up short, and faced around, feeling that now, if ever, the dignity of Man, and the liberty of the subject, must be asserted. To her I merely said, “thank you!” kissing my hand as I spoke; then, fixing my eyes on the idiot at her side, I passed through my clamped teeth, “we shall meet again, Captain!”
"Sure, I hope so, Tubbs," said the unconscious blockhead; "seven is the dinner hour, mind! A cold shiver passed over me; I had made my great effort, and had "blundered." I shouldered my camera again; and strode moodily on.

Two steps, and I was myself again; her eyes, I knew, were upon me, and once more I trod the gravel with an elastic tread. What mattered to me, in that moment, the whole tribe of captains? Should they disturb my equilibrium?

The hill was nearly a mile from the house, and I reached it tired and breathless. Thoughts of Amelia, however, bore me up. I selected the best point of view for the cottage, so as to include a farmer and cow in the picture, cast one fond look toward the distant villa, and, muttering, "Amelia, 'tis for thee!" removed the lid of the lens; in a minute and a half seconds I replaced it; "it is over!" I cried in uncontrollable excitement, "Amelia, thou art mine!"

Eagerly, tremblingly, I covered my head with the hood, and commenced the development. Trees rather misty—well! the wind had blown them about a little; that wouldn't show much—the farmer? well, he had walked on a yard or two, and I should be sorry to state how many arms and legs he appeared with—never mind! call him a spider, a centipede, anything—the cow? I must, however reluctantly, confess that the cow had three heads, and though such an animal may be curious, it is not picturesque. However, there could be no mistake about the cottage; its chimneys were all that could be desired, and, "all things considered," I thought, "Amelia will—"

At this point my soliloquy was interrupted by a tap on the shoulder, more peremptory than suggestive. I withdrew myself from the hood, need I say with what quiet dignity? and turned upon the stranger. He was a thick-built man, vulgar in dress, repulsive in expression, and carried a straw in his mouth; his companion outdid him in these peculiarities. "Young man," began the first, "you're trespassing here, and you must take yourself off, and no bones about it." I need hardly say that I took no notice of this remark, but took up the bottle of hypo-sulphite of soda, and proceeded to fix the picture; he tried to stop me; I resisted; the negative fell, and was broken. I remember nothing further, except that I have an indefinite notion that I hit somebody.

If you can find anything in what I have just read to you to account for my present condition, you are welcome to do so; but, as I before remarked, all I can tell you is that I am shaken, and sore, and stiff, and bruised, and that how it came so I haven't the faintest idea.
