3. Ibid., 478–479.
8. Avivah Gottlieb Zornberg, The Beginning of Desire: Reflections on Genesis (New York: Doubleday Image Books, 1995). Zornberg's description of "evening prayer" in Jacob's life connects easily with nighttime struggles of modern men. "Leaving all support systems behind him, Jacob moves into the world of the night. Here, nothing is clear, all is shifting, phantasm, illusion. And here, paradoxically, Jacob finds his ground of truth" (p. 188). When we sleep, we expect the unpredictable and we are vulnerable to interventions that are so deep they seem to come from God.
