September 13th

Center of the Female Universe: The Early American Kitchen With Sandy Oliver

The economy, health, and hospitality of the early American household depended largely upon the capabilities and energy of the woman or women who ran the operations centered in the kitchen. The old saw says, "men work from sun to sun, but women's work is never done." Cooking, preserving, gardening, and care for small animals to raising children and keeping all the family clothed and healthy, began and never ended in the kitchen.
