Liturgical Reflection

25th Sunday in Ordinary Time

FIRST READING: Wisdom 2:12, 17-20

The wicked are characterized as believing that life is short, that we were born by chance and we will soon be no more. Therefore, life is always ripe for revelry as we use our strength against the weak. But the response of Wisdom goes on to say that they erred... For God formed man to be imperishable... the souls of the just are in the hand of God (2:21-3:1). This time period gave birth to the belief in an afterlife among some Jews.

RESPONSORIAL PSALM: Psalm 54

In the psalmist's words, we can hear the just one of the First Reading crying out to God for help. The wicked have risen up against him. Despite the evil they wish to bring upon him, he still acknowledges the Lord upholds his life.

SECOND READING: James 3:16-4:3

Today's Second Reading continues the exhortation of James with a turn toward internal causes of unethical behavior. In previous passages, the writer pointed out unacceptable behaviors among members of the Church, including discrimination and discord in the community and failure to act on one's claim of faith. Here, James points out the interior dispositions that underlie such ethical lapses. First emphasizing self-centered attitudes and disordered desires as major causes of discord and conflict, he then offers alternatives. Inner attitudes of peace, gentleness, and mercy toward others as well as a shared dependence on God, will counteract the selfish and unruly desires that lead to actions unacceptable in a community dedicated to following Christ.

GOSPEL: Mark 9:30-37

Last week we heard the first of Jesus' three predictions of his suffering and Death, and the second appears today. In today's Gospel Jesus teaches again, in unmistakable terms, that he will be handed over to those who will kill him.

The disciples again give ample evidence that they do not understand Jesus' clear teaching; they fail to grasp not only his suffering, but his servanthood. Focusing on neither, they wrangle about who is most important! Jesus' further lesson is simple but profound: he places before them a child, (the Greek word also means servant) a person with no cultural status and nothing of his or her own. Jesus teaches that those who wish to be first will be last and will serve others. Welcoming a child signifies welcoming Jesus and his Father.

PRIESTS FOR LIFE

Reflection on Today's Readings - Receiving the child is tantamount to receiving God, the Gospel of this weekend tells us. Jesus places this teaching in the context of humble service to others, and his lesson on service is in the wider context of his impending passion, death and resurrection. In other words, at the heart of the Christian life is the Paschal Mystery. That is what brings salvation and changes us. It changes us precisely into people who have the power to love by giving ourselves away. The dynamic of giving ourselves away in humble service is that "self-emptying" of which St. Paul speaks when he writes to the Philippians and says that the Lord Jesus "emptied himself" (Phil. 2:7). The link between these themes in today's Gospel is that the same self-emptying is exactly what is needed in order to welcome one another, from the elderly to the unborn, from those who are like us to those who differ in a thousand ways. Self-emptying frees us from the prejudice that fails to see the one who is different as our neighbor, and frees us from the selfishness that welcomes only those whom we choose to welcome. The Christian faith demands that we accept responsibility for our neighbor based on God's choice, not ours.

The "pro-choice" Culture says we have responsibility only for those for whom we choose to have responsibility. This ties into the first reading. What is described in this passage from Wisdom is essentially an abdication of personal responsibility for one's actions. Those who beset the just man say to themselves that if God is on the just man's side, then it's God's responsibility to save him. We are off the hook. We see a reflection of this mindset in the temptation to abortion. By claiming that "circumstances" leave no other choice than to abort a child, one is placing back on God the responsibility that we each have to take to empty ourselves in humble service, imitating the Master and welcoming the child. www.priestsforlife.org

News From the Vatican

NEVER INSULT YOUR PARENTS! YOUR MOTHER... FATHER! THEY GAVE YOU LIFE

Never insult your parents! Your mother. Your father. They gave you life! Pope Francis deviated from his prepared text to stress this, during his weekly General Audience in St. Peter's Square. Continuing his series of catecheses on the Commandments, this week the Pope reflected on the Fourth Commandment: "Honor your mother and father." Reflecting on what constitutes 'honor,' the Pope said: "To honor one's father and mother means to recognize their importance also with concrete acts which express dedication, affection and care. But there is more to it than just this." Reminding of the full phrase related to the Commandment in Deuteronomy: "Honor your father and your mother, as the Lord your God has commanded you, so that you may live long and that it may go well with you in the land the Lord your God is giving you." (Dt 5:16), Pope Francis said that "honoring parents brings you a long and happy life."

In his reflection, the Pope observed that the Commandment does not speak about the goodness or merit of parents. "It does not speak about the goodness of the parents; it does not require that fathers and mothers are perfect. It speaks of an act of children, aside from the merits of parents," he noted, saying, "It says to us something extraordinary and freeing: even if not all parents are good and not all childhoods are serene, all children should be happy, because the reaching of a full and happy life depends on the just recognition toward those who gave us the world. If children have distanced from their parents, return. Never insult your parents! Your mother, your father. They gave you life!"

"It takes effort to always do good... The road to holiness is not for the lazy!" Pope Francis

That's The Way It Is!

It is well known in society today that many people, especially younger people tend to eschew organized religion. Younger people may believe in the existence of God, but they do not seem to believe that practicing their Faith in an organized religion is an important aspect of belief in God. I have been ordained 10 years. In that time, I have spoken to countless parents who lament the fact that their children and grand-children are not going to Church.

I am often asked the question "Father is there anything we can do to help bring our children back to the Faith?" The truth is, aside from praying for your children or grandchildren, there is little that can be done. One of the things that parents do to try and get their adult children back in the practice of the Faith is to nag them. This is certainly well meaning, but it is not helpful. You cannot argue someone into the Faith or back to the practice of the Faith. You certainly cannot nag someone into the Faith or back to the practice of the Faith. My advice to people is to let it go. I tell them that their children are now adults and must be allowed to make their own decisions. They should pray for the conversion of their children daily then leave it in God's hands.

When someone is looking to convert to the Catholic Faith one of the things I always try to make clear is that they cannot convert for the sake of the family or friends. Even if a spouse is converting, I always make it clear that they cannot convert for the sake of their spouse or their spouse's family. I make it clear to the Confirmation candidates that Confirmation needs to be something they want. They cannot go through this for their sake of their parents. God wants us to approach Him in the Sacraments. God wants to share His life with us, but God also wants to make sure we are approaching him freely and without coercion.

None of this is to suggest that parents do not have the right to make their minor children go to Church, however. I always tell children that until they are living on their own and paying their own bills, their parents have every right to set rules and standards of behavior and hold them accountable to those standards and rules. It is one thing to make a child go to Church. It is entirely something else to force someone to receive a Sacrament they don't want or believe is important.

All parents have to contend with the fact that when their children grow up and become adults; their children will often make decisions for their lives and families that the parents do not agree with. One of those decisions might be the decision not to go to Church, profess a Faith or otherwise be a part of organized religion. The best thing you can do in this situation for your children is to accept that this is where they are. Continue to practice your Faith. Be an example to your children. Hope that they will see the example you set and your life of Faith as something they admire and want to have. Arguing with your children, nagging them, threatening them with Hell and damnation will only make things worse.

I will talk to people about the Faith who are interested. I will defend the Faith when it comes under attack. That, however, is different from trying to nag someone into the Faith or argue them into the Faith. You should feel free to answer questions about the Faith if your children have any. You should feel free to defend the Faith if your children attack it. Feel free to invite your children to speak with me or another clergy person. But whether your children go to Church or believe the practice of the Faith is important is not in your hands. It is important that you recognize this and accept it for what it is. Ultimately our eternal destiny is not in our hands. Thus, we must let go and give it to God.

In answer to the question "What can I do to get my children to come back to the Faith" I reply "Pray for them, and then let it go and leave it to God. Do not nag your children about going to Mass; do not argue with your children about going to Mass. Accept that this is something that is beyond your control. Live your life and be an example to your children." You might want to read on the life of Saint Monica. It was through her perseverance in love and prayer that lead to the conversion of her son Saint Augustine and her abusive husband. What Saint Monica did not do is argue or nag Saint Augustine or her husband. She prayed for them, loved them, then let go and let God.

That's the way it is,

The Reverend David W. Bechtel, Pastor

Eternal Rest Grant Unto Them, O Lord and Let the Perpetual Light Shine Upon Them.

Lord, this we know, no matter how difficult life may be at this time, we know you will not stop loving us and will always hold us in the palm of your hand. We are reaching to you, Lord, to hold us, comfort us, and heal us. Lord, this we know, you are faithful in your love for us today and forever. You are with us, and we are with you. Amen.
