More than 100 people protest illegal immigration program

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (WVLT)-- Alejandro Guizar was ten years old when he and his family came to the US from Mexico.

"I was brought here by my parents to seek an education and escape from the Cartel violence," Guizar said.

He learned English, enrolled in school and new friends. Knoxville became his home.

"I love Tennessee," he said.

Alejandro got the education his parents brought him here for. He graduated from Hardin Valley Academy last year.

But just a week after graduation, the 19-year-old's dreams came to a halt when police found out he's not a US citizen.

"I made the mistake of going to a graduation party, and then I walked home. When I walked home, a police stopped me and got me for public intoxication," Guizar said.

He now finds himself in the middle of a

I became us citizen in 2008, i came to this wonderful country " the right way", i have asked around Hispanics like my in my town (sevierville) and they just don't know that there is a legal process to get a work permit or a visa.

If a hispanic commits a crime, say... DUI....for all the american community WE ALL

HISPANICS does the same and it is not like that.

I do not have an answer about if they are right or not when they protest for something that should be obvious, thank you... victor
