Improve outcomes of annual board retreats

Robert C. Harris
Wednesday, July 02, 2014

Organizations plan an annual retreat to empower the board of directors with information and inspiration. The meeting is designed to transfer information to the leadership. The schedule often includes time for recreational activities or team building.

While every retreat is well-intentioned, when volunteers are asked what they expect to gain, they reply, “I hope we get to know each other better.” Their expectations are low.

When asking executives how prior retreats went, I hear, “It seemed to be a session for the leadership to come up with new projects rather than a high-level discussion of how to improve our organization,” said Crissy Hancock, executive administrative specialist at the Midland Chamber of Commerce in Texas.
Volunteers may view the retreat as a social function mixed with an opportunity to make suggestions. In fact, they feel compelled to offer new projects. Their sentences begin with, “I have a good idea.” The result is a to-do list that creates work for the staff and officers.

Heighten expectations

Improve the retreat by setting higher expectations. Build anticipation by announcing it as a forum for visionary leadership. Schedule time for orientation and social functions but focus the most attention on discussing the mission and goals.

Try not to let conversations fall below the level of visionary leadership. Explain that board discussions should stay above the 50,000-foot altitude. Committee work is at 25,000-30,000 feet; and the staff implements the decisions at the 10,000-foot level.

Anything below that can be characterized as “in the weeds.” The executive director at the Montana Society of CPAs, Jane Egan, said, “When our board really focused on our five goals, everything ended in alignment. From the mission, vision and value statements to the projects, committees and budget, we left our retreat with a road map that energized our staff, board members and volunteers. The outcome of a retreat that thinks long term is rewarding for the leadership, staff and the organization.”

In Bartlesville, Oklahoma, the President of the chamber Sheri Wilt, IOM, stated, "When we plan our retreat to focus on outcomes for the organization and community, and not just telling directors about their duties, everybody leaves motivated and with an understanding of how the current and future years should play out."

Tips for successful retreats

- Advise attendees that the desired outcome is strategic discussion and visionary leadership. Focus on the existing strategic plan — not adding new initiatives.
- Provide information about leadership responsibilities or a board notebook.
- Find an environment that is comfortable and avoids the temptations of office or other distractions.
- Emphasize outcomes: “How can our organization improve results and fulfill its mission?”
- Schedule fun breaks and social events to offer a breather from the high-level thinking.
- Take notes. What is documented is more likely to be achieved. For good ideas that don’t fit in the current program of work, move them to the “parking lot” for future consideration.

The retreat should result in an inspired team ready to govern — not just a list of new projects.
Bob Harris, CAE, provides free governance tools and templates at The NonProfit Center. He is on the faculty for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and has worked in Amman, Jordan, Tokyo, Japan, Kiev, Ukraine and Minsk, Belarus to help organizations. Bob received “Association Partner of the Year” award from Association Trends Magazine in 2012, and he has authored books on association management. To improve management he created the Association Self-Auditing Process, used by more than 20,000 organizations. He believes that nonprofit organizations should be as efficient as any commercial business.
Association Management

Business Management, Services & Risk Management

Related Articles

A crisis in leadership
Job search: Finding a world-class sales organization
Plan your work and work your plan: 3 tips toward effective execution
Are your staff members committed — to their space?
Music boosts creativity, productivity in the workplace
Why there's no such thing as a bad attitude
Using Quora for business
How much are you leaving on the table? Improving your business's after-tax financial efficiency

Recent Articles

Is no-growth anodizing the future of corrosion protection?
The Flying Circus: Chainsaw Charlie
Wordle it — just a little bit
Increased use of split-liver transplants can trim waiting lists
Leadership lessons: Why it pays to put others first

Easy-to-use tools that help non-profit organization save time, effort and money
Your Industry Needs YOUR Expert Voice

We've got the platform you need

Find Out How