Experts estimate there are more than 100,000 associations headquartered in the United States. As industries and professions become more specialized, and as legislation requires more special interest groups, that number increases every day.

In the budget-conscious decade of the ‘90s, associations are seeking more prudent methods of managing their affairs. Association Management Companies (AMCs) have become an increasingly popular option because they offer all of the services association members expect without the overhead and headaches associated with a captive staff and office.

An AMC can allow you to profit in the traditionally non-profit association world. If you don’t mind long hours, if you are adept at wearing many hats and juggling multiple tasks, and if you are looking for an exciting challenge, perhaps opening an AMC is for you.

Bob Harris and Cal Clemons have a combined four decades of experience running successful AMCs. In Building an Association Management Company, they share their secrets on everything from getting started, to business and marketing plans, to soliciting and serving clients, to what the future holds. Topics include:

- Models to Organize an AMC
- Equipment and Staffing Needs
- Writing a Business Plan
- Signing Up the Clients
- Writing Association Agreements
- Handling Your Clients’ Money
- Fee Considerations
- Marketing Your Company
- The RFP Process
