The Remarks of Barbara O'Keefe

We have a great deal to celebrate this evening, and I will get to that shortly, but I would be remiss if I did not mention our challenges and how we are addressing them.

The ExxonMobil-New York State Settlement is not finalized. The world's richest company is still forcing a small, grassroots community organization to divert some of its valuable resources of time, energy and money.

Resources that should be spent reconstructing Fort de la Présentation! The compensation monies and additional land would bring us closer to construction and provide us with much needed space for interpretation and archeological research.

Our lawyer, Marc Gerstman, tells us we are still in the game. We have a major challenge in raising the eight-million dollars necessary to resurrect Fort de La Présentation. We have an endowment fund of $112,000, with a goal of one-million dollars to make the Fort project sustainable.

Thanks to Senator James Wright we are working on a $250,000 grant from the Dormitory Authority. We are investigating additional grants and other funding sources and have been reaching out to other successful grassroots groups and historic institutions as well as State officials and agencies.

Our feasibility study has been done. The design phase of our project with Foit-Albert Associates has been completed. Currently we are conducting a membership campaign and are in the process of developing strategic and business plans.

The cleanup of Lighthouse Point has contributed to solving the 150 year old mystery of where the Fort was actually located. An archeological team from the NYS Museum uncovered four feet of landfill from the City's industrial past to reveal Fort de La Présentation's chapel floor.

We have applied to be placed on the National Register of Historic Places as an archeological site. If successful, the designation will open up additional funding sources.

Next year we will have permanent signage and a limestone kiosk interpreting the history of Fort de La Présentation/Fort Oswegatchie from 1749 through 1813. This will hopefully allow us to be placed on the Heritage Trail.

The planning for the 2010 Fort de La Présentation/Fort Levis final signature event for the NYS French and Indian War 250th Anniversary Commemoration has begun. We are the only designated site without a physical presence. It is our sincere hope to complete the reconstructed fort in time for the commemoration of the last major battle of the War in 2010.

This year's event, at Fort William Henry in Lake George, drew approximately 23,000 spectators with 1,200 reenactors participating. The reenactment brought an estimated 2.5-million dollars into that community. We want those dollars for our community.

French Settlement on the St. Lawrence River

Fort La Présentation was not the first or only French outpost on the St. Lawrence River above Montreal. Just across the river, in what is now Ontario, the French built a supply depot in 1673.

La Galette was established where the community of Johnstown stands today. This waypoint on the river provided logistical support to the strategically located Fort Frontenac. La Galette and its powder magazine were eventually fortified, but the post was captured by the British when they invested Fort de Lévis nearly 90 years later.

Fort Frontenac, originally called Fort Catarqui, was a trading post where Lake Ontario enters St. Lawrence at the mouth of the Catarqui River. In July 1673, while Governor Frontenac was talking peace with the Iroquois, the log and stone fort was taking shape for a two-fold purpose; protect Montreal (then known as Ville-Marie) and nurture the fur trade around the Great Lakes and in the Ohio Valley. Fifteen years later, after the Iroquois besieged the fort, it was ordered abandoned and burned by then Governor Dennonville.

When Frontenac returned as Governor in 1695, the fort was rebuilt entirely of limestone. Fort Frontenac remained in French hands until British forces under Colonel John Bradstreet captured it in August 1758 during the French and Indian War.

To reinforce the defenses of New France, a star-shaped fort and boatyard were constructed at Point-au-Baril (Maitland, Ontario) in 1758. Here the ill-fated, 10-gun barks Outaouaise and Iroquoise were built to keep the British from the descending the river. A year later, the post was abandoned and destroyed to prohibit the British from using the site.

Treaty of Oswegatchie 1760

In early 1760, France's native allies knew British forces were on their way to certain victory. Representatives of the Roman Catholic Iroquois living on the réductions (reservations) of Oswegatchie, Kanesatake and Kahnawake sought assurances in February 1760 that the Six Nations would not attack them in the last stages of the French and Indian War.

A proclamation issued April 26, 1760 by General Jeffery Amherst declared, "His Majesty has not sent me to deprive any of you of your Lands or Property," and promising, in return for their support, their "just rights," would be maintained, including their hunting territories.

When Amherst's army reached La Présentation and Fort de Lévis in mid-August, William Johnson, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, met delegates from the "Seven Confederate Nations of Canada." Johnson promised to confirm their possession of their lands and their freedom of religion. In return for a promise not to be treated as enemies of Britain, France's former allies agreed to be neutral for the remainder of the war.

At Kahnawake in September 1760, the terms of the Treaty of Oswegatchie were confirmed. A letter to the British prime minister from Johnson said the Indians "ratified a treaty with us." In 1994, the Supreme Court of Canada upheld the Treaty of Oswegatchie.

In the summer of 1760, as General Amherst's forces moved down the St. Lawrence against Montreal, both barks fell to British gunboats and went into British service. The Iroquoise was captured in mid-August off the then-abandoned Fort La Présentation.

The French and Canadiens had withdrawn three miles downstream to Isle Royale (Chimney Island) and built Fort de Lévis in an attempt to prevent the British descent on Montreal. The fort fell after a three-day battle in late August 1760, but only after the defending forces had exhausted their gunpowder.

The British rebuilt the fort under a new name, Fort William-Augustus (the remains of which were obliterated during Seaway construction in the 1950s).

They also refurbished La Présentation. Renamed Fort Oswegatchie, it was finally ceded to the United States in 1796.

Related notes:

The native population of Fort La Présentation is cited as 3,000. However, this does not mean such a large community clustered immediately outside the walls. Abbé Picquet's parish also included La Galette, Sugatzo, Ile à Galop, and Ile Picquet.

Abbé Picquet was the founder of La Présentation, but he did not "build" the Fort. This work was under the supervision of the King's Engineer, Étienne Robbert de la Morandière.

The name La Galette was inspired by a low-lying island just off-shore. A galette is thin buck-wheat pancake.

Point-au-Baril was restored and briefly held by the British. The remnants were ultimately submerged by successive efforts to make the St. Lawrence fully navigable.

The stabilized remains of the Fort Frontenac are located on the east side of downtown Kingston, Ontario.

The Iroquoise, renamed Anson by the British, was wrecked in 1761 off Carleton Island at the head of the St. Lawrence River. The wreck has been explored and documented. See http://home.netcom.com/~srhf/SRHF\_REPORT.html

Archaeologists Find Fort Site

Archaeologists from the New York State Museum were on Lighthouse Point in October 2007 to pinpoint the remains of Fort de la Présentation.

The researchers, led by Ogdensburg native Aaron Gore, uncovered one of three of the fort's bastions indicated in an earlier search with ground-penetrating radar. The fourth bastion was not found.

A cobblestone floor was uncovered in the northeast bastion suggesting this was the chapel as shown on period drawings. Gun flints and a musket ball were found on this floor.

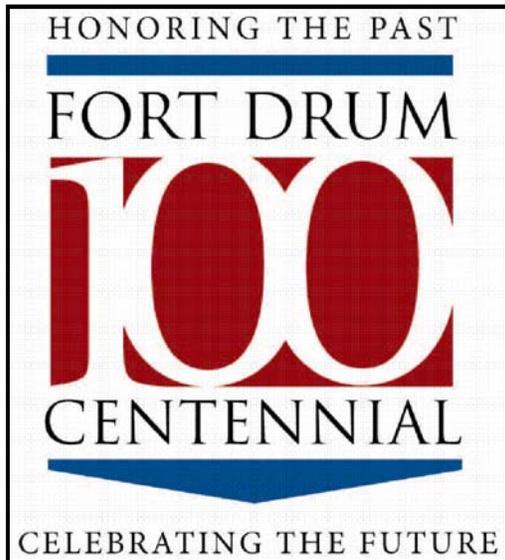

The dig confirmed the location of the Fort and put to rest the question of its exact location.

Although up to six feet of accumulated overburden was removed by heavy equipment, the work undertaken in the Fall barely scratched the surface.

Decades more detailed archaeological investigation lies ahead as researchers have the opportunity to investigate the remains of Fort La Présentation.

The location of the original shoreline remains undiscovered.

The First Army at Fort Drum

In the winter of 1756, the French decided upon an aggressive raid to interdict the British supply line between Albany and Fort Oswego on Lake Ontario. A Marine Officer, Chaussegros de Lery, was chosen to lead.

He gathered a small, but formidable force of French Marines, Canadiens, and Native American Warriors at Fort La Présentation in March 1756, and between March 13-27, 1756 they trekked to Fort Bull on the Mohawk River (near modern day Rome).

The winter raid was audacious. On snowshoes, in severe cold and heavy snow, they pulled sledges containing supplies along the Indian River from Fort La Présentation, crossed the modern-day Fort Drum, then followed the Black River to Fort Bull.

In a sharp action, de Lery's command destroyed Fort Bull, and caused a supply crisis at Fort Oswego by destroying numerous provisions intended for this fort. De Lery's force successfully returned via Lake Ontario to Fort La Présentation.

This was the first use by a European military force of what is today Fort Drum. This type of courageous, light infantry raid is representative of the type of mission the 10th Mountain Division employs today.

WAR TRAILS SOUTH A FORT DRUM CENTENNIAL EVENT

The French de Lery Raid on Fort Bull
March 1756

The weekend of March 15-16, 2008 a number of narrated commemorative events are planned for reenactors and the public in Ogdensburg and at Fort Drum.

1200, Saturday, March 15 - Lighthouse Point, Ogdensburg. The French, Canadiens and Natives will reenact the council persuading the Natives to join the raid. The raiding party will head off on snowshoes and with sledges around the peninsula

1230, Saturday, March 15 - Lighthouse Point, Ogdensburg. Reenactment of the skirmish outside Fort Bull. The French, Canadien and Native raiding party will engage British pickets in a to-and-fro action from which the British retreat.

1100, Sunday, March 16 - Clark Hall/Fort Drum Heritage Center, Fort Drum. The French, Canadien and Native raiding party will traverse the Fort Drum portage on snowshoes. British forces will establish a picket, relieve sentries and build warming fires.

1200, Sunday, March 16 - Fort Drum Heritage Center, Fort Drum. The French, Canadien and Native raiding party will scout the British position and launch their attack. Following a see-saw action the British will be defeated and flee pursued by the raiding party. Warm refreshments and washrooms will be available at the Heritage Center following the skirmishing.

1300, Sunday, March 16 - Fort Drum Heritage Center, Fort Drum. At the Fort Drum Museum, the Fort La Présentation Association opens a temporary exhibit on the history of Fort La Présentation. Jack Vargo will present a lecture on the Fort Bull Raid.

The Battle of Ogdensburg, February 1813

British and Canadian troops stationed in Prescott, Ontario (then Upper Canada) celebrated George Washington's birthday February 22, 1813 by attacking Ogdensburg.

They'd have likely stayed on their side of the St. Lawrence, except for shopping at David Parrish's store. However, a Southern hothead, Captain Benjamin Forsyth had come to town in August 1812 with a company of the 1st US Rifles to monitor enemy movements on and along the river.

Forsyth, who had no love for anything British, had a very proactive understanding of monitoring the other side. His Riflemen burned the Crown storehouse at Gananoque in September 1812. In February 1813, Forsyth heard of an incursion from the Canadian side into New York and 53 American prisoners carried back to Elizabethtown (Brockville). Fearing they may be executed, he launched an attack from Morristown the night of Feb. 7.

In the early hours of Feb. 8, there was no resistance. The jail was surrounded and all prisoners freed, save one Canadian awaiting the gallows. Forsyth took several prominent Canadians as prisoners to Ogdensburg and liberated 134 muskets, 20 rifles, two casks of ammunition and other supplies.

Not long after the Rifle Company was safe in Ogdensburg, a couple of adventurous types slipped back across the river ice and stole horses from a Canadian farmer.

Col. "Red George" MacDonnell had no love for anything Forsyth, but when his emissaries, sent under a flag of truce to retrieve the animals, were sent back with only a message from Forsyth, the die was cast. Forsyth informed MacDonnell he would gladly meet him on the ice at the earliest opportunity, and that day came Feb. 22.

That day 800 British and Canadian troops mustered on the ice, but instead of the customary drill the American were accustomed to seeing, they divided into two forces and headed toward the American shore. Forsyth, who knew of the drilling, was slow to react.

MacDonnell led 500 men toward the town. Captain Jenkins took 300 toward Lighthouse Point and the unrestored Fort Presentation, as the Americans then called it. Jenkins force was shattered by artillery fire, Jenkins himself severely wounded and they withdrew through the deep snow to the Canadian side. They were met by Bishop MacDonnell who organized the fit troops into units and sent them to join MacDonnell's attack.

At the corner of Caroline and Washington Streets in the thinly defended village, MacDonnell's force formed into two wings to sweep back the opposing troops. The Americans were forced to yield on the east bank of the Oswegatchie. Then, with captured American artillery, the British and Canadians compelled Forsyth to abandon his position across the river on Lighthouse Point.

In less than an hour, the Battle of Ogdensburg was over. Forsyth and his men withdrew toward Sackets Harbor. Eleven artillery pieces were captured along with all American ordnance, marine, commissariat and quartermaster-general's stores. MacDonnell's troops burned the armed schooners Dolphin and Niagara, two gunboats and the barracks. Seventy prisoners, including four officers, were taken back to Canada.

Not long after the battle, the British and Canadians returned to Ogdensburg to patronize Mr. Parrish's store and to have tea with Mrs. Parrish.

Now for the celebration part! The Fort Association is very pleased we will be working with the City of Ogdensburg to get the land, once owned by Bernier and Carr, cleaned up and transferred to the Association. We believe using the parcel to develop a replica of the original Oswegatchie Indian Village will help make the proposed Fort de la Présentation project an even more economically-viable tourism attraction that will draw visitors to our community.

This is an example of the partnership between the City and the Association to use our rich history and culture to help reinvigorate our economy, bring new life to our waterfront, and visitors to our community. We are fortunate to have a dedicated association who share their time and talents to bring the reconstruction project closer to fruition.

The Fort Association owns 22 acres free of petroleum contamination on Lighthouse Point adjacent to the original fort site. The City currently has our land assessed for one-million dollars and we do not owe a cent on the property.

In 2000 many people thought we were attempting the impossible by trying to force ExxonMobil, one of the world largest corporations, to clean up the Fort site; however our long battle is over. The Fort Association is an example of what a committed grass roots organization can accomplish.

There is an individual at the head table who told me in the beginning he did not believe we could accomplish our task. The key to our success was that we did not do it alone, but by forging a partnership. I would like to share an analogy this former disbeliever shared with me.

The pinky represents the Fort Association. By itself it is weak, especially when compared to the resources of a corporate giant. But like David against Goliath, we had a mission and would not give up.

Add to that (the second finger) our elected officials who from the beginning showed faith in our vision. Congressman McHugh, Senator Wright, Assembly Woman Scozzafava and Assemblyman Aubertine provided the resources necessary to investigate and cleanup the petroleum on Lighthouse Point.

The City of Ogdensburg pitched in to administer grants for us. In addition to their moral and financial support, these individuals have been our voice in Albany to insure the cleanup did occur, and to the extent that met our needs, which resulted in the pristine waterfront property we have today.

Our environmental consultants are the third finger making us still stronger. One of the first things we had to do was to prove we had a huge problem. Not knowing where to start, Don Hooper suggested talking to Marijean Remington of Atlantic Testing Laboratories (ATL). She agreed to give us a little of her time to meet with Sandra LeBarron, Regional Director for DEC. Well, after seven years she is still here.

ATL is so well respected they worked in consort with the DEC to take samples and collaborate on remedies and approaches. Marijean also found a good lawyer for us who also volunteered to give us a few hours. For more than six years, Judy Drabicki provided our legal strategy which resulted in clean land and the setting of several NYS precedents including ExxonMobil's "voluntary" reimbursement of our attorney and environmental consultant fees without being sued.

The pointer finger is reserved for our honorees - Region 6 NYS DEC*. I remember my first meeting with the regional director, Sandy LeBarron. I was so nervous I would jeopardize the cleanup by saying or doing the wrong thing. My preconceptions were so wrong. Sandy and her staff walked us through the process, came to Board meetings, and were available for questions and listened to our concerns.

She spoke on our behalf in Albany. Without her efforts to remove the consent order that gave the polluter all the rights, we probably would not be celebrating tonight. The project managers Darrell, Swerdoski Gregg Townsend, and Lincoln Fancher listened to our vision and passion and oversaw the cleanup to meet the association's intended use for the property and worked around our events. State employees are sometimes taken for granted. We want you to know how much we appreciate your dedication.

Finally, the New York Environmental Protection and Spill Compensation Fund was the thumb that provided the money...and the punch to get the job done!

Thank you.
