What was written was meant to be forgotten.
Sometimes I sing so pretty it breaks my own heart.

J.Mae Barizo, “The Marble Palace”

Am I being too dramatic my dear?

Dearest C, perhaps, but how shall I put it— your letter knocked the shit out of me— and now my fingers have uncrossed— all anticipation drained & the day my dear, shows off its awful spread of light—Really, I don't want a fight dearest C, it's just that for me it was such a letdown— felt so fucked so deflated left here drifting into a new month of bland weather with no hope of having your hair fanned about pillow, without these little intimacies— your fork cracking crème brulee me picking crumb from upper left lip my hand early a.m. asleep on your hip yet here we are dear darling so much crush of wave ocean cascade between us on dank day with me thinking,

Sonnet

I can't think of you anymore—

Reading your letter last night a bit too much wine already sloshing in head when lids slid shut I heard high heels clicking through H.K. saw you sitting on a park bench 5 a.m. with a Borges book hiding face

O headless ha-ha if I sauntered silly & proffered a smile, what C. could become of us?

O my dear delicious consumer of books
I can't bear to think of you anymore—

I toss turn, right to left, curled ball, then legs straight foot hanging off bed covers tangled— what's with this wet staining cheek spoilng my specialties? O misbehaved uncontained black hair ghosted body caught in morning's first glimmer slinking back to apartment a stranger

To Leave All Over You

Gun-powder smell mixed with magnolia gum pie bits flaked about the lips—

Quick! get me to another party— my taste buds turning a falsetto song of someone slipping off dress yes peaches my favorite too!

But the dogwoods ruin me. So what if a star comes crumbling down we'll be mid-river in a canoe sculpted of cow skeleton—

Have you heard about the banana over Texas? It's okay, we'll stick to citrus. Try to float this out as long as the sun

The Film of the Movie of the Film

& what do you remember of the day?

i remember nothing of the day but instead film, a variation of a film with a bad script two bodies on a street before a green screen

two bodies beneath a graying sky no the sky was receding its gray it was an open shot wide-angle lens then zoom beneath a patch-work blue above

silence
the acting got better, the script called for

& what do you remember of the day?

not much of the day has persisted maybe a sign something about happy hour maybe there was a scent of something oregano let's assume it was the hour of dinner

& there were two bodies hers leaned into his

the stuff of ache dripping from the eyes an eye

careening upwards

a short appearance of yellow slowly sinking a boy no make it a man trembling with another body trembling against his body the sky

salmon-pinked

no trees, no leaf, no branch

& what of the season?

seasons stay the same in this script same fish swimming in same dirty water same aquariums with same tied-claw crabs

a hand wiping away water moisture staining cheek, penetrating skin

& what do you remember of the day

no such music: no sonatas, no churches chiming maybe some lump-throat canaries locked inside a flower shop, gates drawn shut, puddles of left-behind rain, a hand clenching a blue

jacket, a man in a blue hood looking away unleaning

four eyes meeting— then her a camera angle exaggerating space a fifth floor walk-up, a key unlocking a door a room with no invitation to dance a room with a bed containing a body collapsed

& what do you remember of the day

only the little bits,

two bodies,

the unforgettable

which continues,
