Pat sends Mike to the lumberyard , "Need twenty 4 X 2's," he says to the yardman. "

Guess you mean 2 X 4's," he grins, " How long do you want them?"

" Dunno for sure, but it will be a while, he's building a garage."

JUNE PROGRAM---PAUL FONTENOY OF NC MARITIME MUSEUM

Paul Fontenoy is the Curator of Maritime Research at the NC Maritime Museum. He is the author of The Sloops of the Hudson River and many journal articles on naval and maritime history and nautical archaeology.

Paul was born in South Africa and educated in Canada, the United Kingdom, and the United States. After 16 years in the air transportation industry, he reverted to his first love – naval and maritime history – and taught at New York University for four years before moving to Beaufort and the North Carolina Maritime Museum.

Paul heads the maritime branch of the museum that oversees the Watercraft Center, the collection, and library. The Watercraft Center conserves, maintains, restores, and constructs traditional wooden boats that are significant to the state's maritime heritage. It also includes a model shop, where skilled artisans construct and repair model ships and boats.

The subject of Paul's presentation to us will be special find woodworking techniques used in model building. We will look at cutting uniform beams, making up planked decks, and constructing gratings, among other tasks. While these techniques are particularly applicable to model ship construction, many of them may well be more generally useful in other areas of woodworking to close tolerances and in small sections. This should be a great program you will not want to miss!

Woodworking Tip

To transfer a pattern to a work piece (in this case a hold-down arm for a taper jig), we used a simple trick. All it required was a photocopy of the pattern and an ordinary household iron.

With the photocopy placed face down against the work piece, slowly move the iron (set on high) back and forth, see top photo.

The heat from the iron reactivates the toner on the photocopy and transfers the image to the work piece, see bottom photo.
