

Quick trip stateside before attending AGM

by Klaus Kreye

With a pesky, persistent high pressure system over the Pacific North-West we had sunshine every day. So it's only natural that thoughts turn to motorcycles.....

At short notice we "saddled up" and headed out. On Thursday the 4pm ferry took us to Terra Firma, from where we headed down to the USA. Riding deep into the chilly evening took us to Sedro-Woolley.

Friday dawned foggy, but within an hour's worth of riding we enjoyed the sunshine and a hearty breakfast in a cool little saloon in Concrete. Our route along Highway 20 took us to Winthrop, Twisp and an ice-cream at Tonasket. From here the route took us over Highway 7 to the sleepy border crossing at Nighthawk.

The fall colours were stunning, we just could not stop every time for a picture. Colours were more yellow – we were too late for the reds.

The plan was to call it a day in Princeton, but the going was good and the ferry deadline loomed!

So we pushed on over Manning Park to Hope for the night. This made the last leg to Tsawwassen easier on Saturday for the 1pm ferry – had to get home in time for the AGM!

Cooking on the Road: How to Create a Light Weight Set Up

BMW says you can now 3D print your own parts

Editor's Introduction: This is the first in a series of articles by Kylie, a food scientist and professional chef, about cooking while on adventure motorcycle rides. Kylie is currently doing a round-the-world trip with her trusty Honda CB500X. You can follow her mouth watering cooking adventures at @moto_bites.

Love it or hate it, cooking your own food is an excellent way of saving precious travel funds and staying in control of your nutrition when you travel. They don't need to be fine dining meals taking an hour to prepare, but you can also do a lot more than opening a packet of freeze-dried curry and adding water.

When I first started moto camping I wasn't sure where to start, and I am a qualified chef! So I completely understand the apprehension and reservation some of you may have about cooking on the road.

After careful consideration in my planning and packing stages before my round the world trip, I decided the most important factors when it came to camp cooking was a set up that was compact and lightweight but versatile enough to make sure I would be able to cook a wide range of foods. Did you know that last year BMW launched a new GS that has two-wheel drive? They say that winter test rider Reiner Scherbeck rode the R1200GS xDrive Hybrid across the frozen Barents Sea all the way to the North Pole and back!

As if that weren't exciting enough, this year BMW announced a program that will allow you to 3D print your own small motorcycle parts from BMW's designs.

They'll sell you an accessory top-box that has a 3D printer housed inside. As long as you have the raw materials, you can print anything from plastic to titanium using their Selective Laser Sintering (SLS) technology.

If you spring for the printer accessory, no matter where you break down in the world, you can make your own parts and be on your way. If you don't have internet access, as long as you have the right parts diagram downloaded ahead of time you can still print away. iPart 3d Mobile Printer is self-powered by a special saline battery.
