On 23 November 1920, Ernest Ostler wrote to the Director of Soldier Settlements requesting information about obtaining a loan. He stated that he needed the money to purchase an oil engine and circular saw plant for the purpose of cutting out building timber. He stated he had a block at Pappinbarra Creek, near his brother (Alfred) and their cousin. [1] He eventually applied for his loan on 20 January 1921. His block at Pappinbarra Creek was in the Port Macquarie Land District, Parish of Forbes, County of Macquarie – Homestead Farm No. 1920.16.[2]

In April 1921, he wrote stating that his funds had run out and he needed financial help to carry on. He believed that if he received financial assistance to tide him over the unproductive period, ‘that he would never look back’. [3] He also stated that he was in good health ‘except for the occasional period of trench fever symptoms which were getting less severe and less frequent’. [4] He subsequently received £100 at this date but also received additional loan money in 1922 and 1924. [5]

By May 1934, he was married with six young children dependent upon him. At this date, he was milking nineteen cows whereas only a short time before, he had twenty nine.[6] As a result of his war injuries, he was unable to do any hard work and was obliged to employ labour.[7] He was receiving 38/- per month for running the Post Office at Upper Pappinbarra and both he and his wife, Nellie Reeson were receiving war pensions.[8] She was an English nurse whom he had met when he was being treating in hospital for his wounds and for being gassed.[9]

Ernest was on his block until 1936 when he share farmed the property.[10] He moved to Port Macquarie for six months before moving to Harrington on the Manning River where he took over the Post Office.[11]

Alfred George Ostler had a Homestead Farm of 222 acres in the Port Macquarie Land District, Parish of Forbes, County of Macquarie. It was a part of Upper Pappinbarra Soldier Settlement.[1] He stated that he required his Advance for a house, clearing, stock, and a dairy.[2]

Albert wrote to the Under Secretary for Lands on 9 June 1923 asking that the terms of repayment be reviewed. He acknowledged that the terms would be manageable for successful settlers and asked that ‘the burden be made a little lighter’ for himself.[3] It is not known if he was successful in this. By 20 October 1926, he was milking fifteen cows but due to the shortage of feed they were ‘strong but low in condition’. [4] It is not known how long Alfred stayed on his block. The last date provided in the loan file is 26 August 1927.
