East High Class of 1955

Inspiring Speaker Series presents

Harold E. Morse, Ph.D.

East High School Class of 1955

Thursday, October 18, 2012

Emerson Park Pavilion

Harold Morse founded two cable television networks, the Learning Channel and Ovation, as well as the American Community Service Network, a not-for-profit corporation. Under his leadership, TLC became one of the nation's fastest growing cable networks, serving more than 20 million television households. OVATION remains to this day the only television network dedicated exclusively to the arts.

Dr. Morse began his career in education, teaching in Rome, NY, public schools. As a Washington Fellow during the Johnson administration, he helped create and implement the Developing Institutions Program for assisting black colleges and universities. He was responsible for building hundreds of vocational technical schools, university facilities, and teacher training projects throughout Appalachia.

He was a founding board member of Cable in the Classroom, a cable industry initiative designed to provide cable programming to the nation's schools.

Dr. Morse is currently the Chairman and CEO of The Health and Healing Network (H+H), an integrative medicine electronic platform. He is also chairman and CEO of HMORSE INC., a management consulting company.
